Overview

Larken joined Sher Edling because she believes social justice begins with the environment. Her practice focuses on representing public entities seeking treatment costs for contaminated water and other natural resources, as well as representing states and local governments in climate deception litigation against members of the fossil fuel industry.

Before joining Sher Edling, Larken worked as an advocate for housing justice in Los Angeles. She attended the UCLA School of Law. Prior to attending law school, she worked as a wilderness ranger in Idaho's Sawtooth National Recreation Area.
